To Whom It May Concern:

In the summer of 2007, we decided to renovate the main floor of our house, add a large deck, replace all exterior doors and windows, and do some routine maintenance to the exterior of our 50 plus year old house. Daunted by such a large undertaking, we sought the names of reputable contractors. Freyenhagen Construction was recommended to us by a contractor who does new home construction and by a prominent local business man.

From the bid process through the completion of our project, Jeremy and the Freyenhagen crew behaved in a professional manner. They were able to implement design solutions that utilize the same footprint of our galley kitchen, but made wonderful use of the available space, and the finished product is gorgeous! They never said that something we wanted could not be done. If part of the project did not turn out as we expected, the crew was quick to come up with a fix with which we were more than satisfied.

As we did our renovation in phases over the period of more than a year, we got to know and like the folks at Freyenhagen. In fact, we trusted the workers so much that after the start of the kitchen, we left town for 6 weeks. We were gone several other times during our renovation, and always felt confident that the crew would respect our home and keep it safe. We were equally impressed with the independents that Freyenhagen utilized. Everyone was well supervised during the course of the day by the foreman and during daily visits by Jeremy or one of his assistants.

The Freyenhagen crew took every care with the parts of the house that were not under construction. At the end of the day, they made sure that the job site was neat as a pin. At the beginning of each week, they gave us a timeline, which listed when and what would be done during the week. The work progressed at a steady and rapid pace. While we were away, Jeremy emailed us photos of the progress.

The parts of the process that we enjoyed most (besides spending time with "the guys"), was seeing our ideas come to fruition. We were very pleased with the finished product, but most particularly with the new French doors in the dining room and the expanded opening between the family room and living room. Oh, and the new baseboards.

Our renovation was an interesting and fun process. We feel fortunate to have found such a talented, responsible, and responsive company to help us with such an important investment in our home. We recommend them with confidence.

Sincerely,

Richard & Katherine Aldrich
